

For almost ten years now, the Assumptionist Center in Brighton has been the home of a core group of community members and a residence for young, single men who are studying and/or working in the Boston area who wish to share an experience in Christian community life in the Catholic tradition. They come together on a regular basis to share meals, prayer, recreation and meetings through which they discover how God is working in their daily lives.

One of these gatherings takes place on six Sundays during the academic year and is called, "Conversations at the Center." Focusing on different topics each time, it is an opportunity to come together with guests to pray, learn and discover what it means to be Church.

At the last Sunday "Conversations...," the topic was on human trafficking. The following reflective summary was written by a former resident of the Center, Jonathan Wheeler.
