

It has been said quite often that the Assumptionists in Kinshasa (Democratic Republic of the Congo) haven't yet spoken their last word. It is this optimism coupled with many efforts and much sacrifice for the Kingdom of God that can be seen crowned with the the Emmanuel d'Alzon school complex situated on the outskirts of Kinshasa, in N'sele commune, in the township of Mangengenge / Bibwa.

Just a little bit of background….It's been thirty years since the Assumptionists settled in Kinshasa. From the time of their arrival in 1988, the Assumptionists first dedicated themselves to vocation ministry and to the formation of future priests by building a house of theology. Shortly thereafter, they assumed responsibility for the supervision of a parish, Divin Maître à Masina sans-fil, for the evangelization of the People of God.
