

Fr. Vincent Machozi, A.A. is an Assumptionist from the D.R.Congo (Central Africa) who is studying at Boston University's School of Theology since September 2006. In May 2011, he received a  Certificate in Religion and Conflict Transformation from the Boston Theological Institute (BTI) after fulfilling the academic requirements of the Religion and Conflict Transformation Program. Students from all over the world preparing to become peacemakers in their respective countries, churches, congregations, NGO's, register every year in this program. Fr Vincent, who intends to be an educator and a peacemaker upon his return in the D.R.Congo, registered in this program during 2010-2011 with other students from the following countries: USA (8), Jamaica (1), Tanzania (1), Ivory Coast(1), Ghana(1), Belgium (1), South-Korea(2), Serbia (1), Zimbabwe (1), and Puerto Rico (1).

This program brings together faculty and speakers from all the BTI schools, namely Boston University, Boston College, Andover Newton Theological School, Harvard Divinity School, Episcopal Divinity School, etc. to analyze critical conflicts happening across the globe with their differences and complexities. For each one of them, the role of religious peacebuilding (peacebuilding as done by religious leaders, churches, religious institutions) is evaluated in comparison to political peacebuilding. Since World War II, religious peacebuilding has been called the missing dimension of statecraft. World Religions, including Islam, possess moral and social characteristics that equip them in unique ways to engage in efforts to promote peace.
