

The documents we have been working on have been written and translated, proposals have been announced, the evaluation completed.... In the room where the session took place, the photos which decorated it have been taken down, the microphones arranged, and participants followed one after another with their memory sticks to copy everything possible. Yes, we finish the session, and an atmosphere of relaxation can be felt, everything has been accomplished, and a certain sadness: we have created something beautiful together and now it is time to say goodbye.

Life continues for each one of the participants. Tomorrow at 5 AM the exodus begins: little by little we say goodbye to Nairobi, as the city welcomes President Obama. It was not possible to coordinate the schedule of the American president so as to include us in his visit, unfortunately!

It's now the time to say goodbye to you as well. Thank you for having accompanied us during these days; fraternity has certainly been lived. We will meet again during our lives, in this mission for the Kingdom.
